Advanced Management of Minor Injuries

MOD001620
30 credits, level 7
Chelmsford campus
February 2016

About the course
If you're a nurse or other health care professional, working in first contact or emergency care setting, this module will provide you with advanced decision making skills, theoretical knowledge and advanced practical skills to work autonomously in caring for patients who present with a minor injury.

The RCN (2010) suggest that advanced practitioners, with the appropriate education, support and development, can complement services traditionally delivered by a doctor, improving the patient journey and quality throughout the care environment.

Our module covers all of the common injuries for both adults and children, giving examples of history taking, examination, radiology, treatment and advice for each condition.

You'll be supervised in your practice placement by experienced medical staff and/or advanced practitioners who will see, treat and discharge, or refer to a specialist team, patients, including children, with a range of minor injuries.

Assessment
You'll be assessed on a 2,000-word critical analysis, based on a practice case-study, enabling you to demonstrate your ability to apply research and reflection to inform your practice at an advanced level. You'll also complete a practice competency assessment.

Entry requirements
- You've been a registered nurse for two years and have been working for at least six months within a first contact, emergency or urgent care setting.
- You must have a first degree or equivalent and be recommended for this course by your manager.
- Your practice placement must be supported by an appropriately experienced and qualified advanced practitioner, agreed by your manager and the module tutor.
